Economic turmoil, support by Congress for laws favoring union representation such as the Employee Free Choice Act and the increased investment of labor unions in efforts to organize employees have substantially heightened the likelihood that unions will be more aggressive and successful in the future than they have been in the past in attempts to represent employees. How do employers avoid unionization in this changing political and economic climate? This seminar will help answer that question.

The seminar will be conducted by Thomas W. Budd and Scott M. Wich of Clifton Budd & DeMaria, LLP, a New York City based law firm specializing in employment and labor related matters. Mr. Budd has spent over 40 years successfully thwarting union attempts to organize Firm clients. For over the past decade, Mr. Wich has counseled employers on union avoidance and related preventative measures.

Seminar participants will receive a free copy of the book Combating the Resurgence of Organized Labor written by Alfred T. DeMaria, a Firm partner.
